This little oasis, secluded in its own bay on the California coastline, has oft been referred to as 'The American Riviera.' With the Santa Ynez mountains on one side and the Pacific Ocean on the other, Santa Barbara consists of just 18.9 square miles and 90,000 people. Part of the city's charm is a result of its location on the only stretch of Pacific coastline that runs east-west. This unique aspect gives Santa Barbara its beloved temperate climate, producing much in the way of semi-tropical fauna and creating a constant vacation environment.

Santa Barbara boasts 25 miles of sweeping coastline with nine beaches, spreading from the small seaside town of Carpinteria, just south of the city, to residential Goleta to the north. With the ocean stretching out at your feet, you can enjoy everything from whale-watching cruises to guided sport-fishing trips, scuba-diving, swimming, surfing or simply walking on the golden sands. Heading away from the ocean a mile or two, some of the best hiking in California is to be had in the surrounding foothills. Hundreds of miles of rocky trails lead up to crests with spectacular views and icy streams. Beyond the mountains, the Santa Ynez "back-country" is known for equally spectacular views and at least 50 wineries, many of which are open to the public for tours, tastings and picnics. Cycling is very popular in Santa Barbara, as are hang-gliding and rock climbing. And for naturalists, the wild flowers and other fauna are abundant, with many species of birds in the region worthy of ornithological study.

Cultural offerings in this small but humming city never disappoint, from the elegant, cosmopolitan Museum of Art to the 100-year-old Lobero Theatre. You'll also find many art galleries, theaters, landscaped gardens and architectural charms that will delight any strolling party. A traditional Spanish influence is reflected throughout the city, and one of the oldest examples of this is the Old Spanish Mission, built in 1787. The Mission is, to this day, the main historical attraction, and is both beautiful and very active, offering services and tours daily. You may also want to visit the older paseos and historical arcades or explore the rebuilt original native adobe, known as the Presidio.

Santa Barbara nights are incomparable, almost always warm and clear, inviting the senses and inspiring the taste buds with a multitude of great restaurants to choose from. There's something in every flavor and price range whether you're in the mood for Mexican food (La Super-Rica Taqueria wins awards every year) or a gourmet feast from four- and five-star restaurants like the intimate Downey's or the grand dining room at Citronelle. And of course, a spectacular variety of seafood is served at beachside restaurants such as the Brown Pelican and the lively Brophy Brothers Bar & Restaurant.

Beyond the beach, the Spanish stucco and quaint facades, Santa Barbara is also a friendly small town offering ample opportunities for shopping and exploring. Paseo Nuevo for instance, is a pretty village-style shopping center where you'll find the town's oldest dive bar, two department stores, a lingerie outlet, and a wide range of restaurants and boutiques. Santa Barbarans do enjoy their coffee, and it's no coincidence that brunch is one of the favorite meals in these parts. You may want to try the Euro-styled D'Angelo Bread bakery, The Come Back Cafe or Esau's for a sampling of the town's brunch sensibilities. At the other end of the day, Santa Barbara serves a fine cocktail, too. Jimmy's

Oriental Gardens is one of the oldest restaurants and bars in town, and Rocks is one of the newest, but they both know how to mix a great martini. The Wildcat Lounge will appeal to the young and wild at heart, the Paradise Cafe to the young professional and the El Encanto Restaurant and balcony is perfect for those in search of an elegant dining experience. If these places don't meet your lofty expectations, then a trip to the swanky Biltmore Hotel or the pretty and pricey San Ysidro Ranch -- where President Kennedy honeymooned -- just might.
